MONTHLY RETROSPECT OF POLITICS.

THE view of political affairs is at this moment of extraordinary interest. The close of the year promises what was little expected at its commencement, and the contending parties in Europe seem to apply to the contest for power, with renovated vigour. The coming crisis will be awful to a great degree; some persons sanguinely anticipate the overthrow of the Bonaparte dynasty: others conceive that the resources, the resources, the military skill of the French Emperor, will extricate, and render him triumphant; many are confounded by the conflict of new and surprising circumstances: various parties, as usual, are influenced in their opinions, by merely interested motives: but on the whole, Europe is agitated more profoundly, than since the beginning of the French Revolution. A concise retrospect will lead us to a more minute, and detailed examination of her situation. The peace of Tilsit, and the seizure of the Danish fleet had placed the European nations in a novel position. The Continent, wearied with vain struggles against France, acquiesced apparently under her influence and dominion. The great remaining land power in forming an alliance with her, turned her views to Turkey, and the East, and entirely estranged herself from England. That once most respectable maritime power, Denmark, was deprived of her naval force, on a plea, which never will be wanting, where temptation is strong; and was thus cast into the arms of France. Prussia was annihilated. The north of Germany depressed, as much as the South had been.

A war of duties and confiscations, vexatious to the commercial world at large, and unavailing as to the grand object, arose between Great Britain and France. The ports of Portugal were shut against her ancient ally; the House of Braganza shortly after emigrated to South America, leaving the whole peninsula at the discretion of Bonaparte. It was in this spot a new and interesting scene was about to present itself. The French government had indicated by its movements, that something mysterious was in agitation respecting Spain. It is probable that Bonaparte had discovered some proceedings in the Spanish court which roused his suspicions, and
